LEADERSHIP & MINISTRY IN RURAL CHURCH GROUPS

A large ecumenical research report - Leadership and ministry, lay and ordained: insights from rural multi-church groups - explores leadership and the development of the ministry of lay people in rural multi-church groups. It is available from the Arthur Rank Centre. A summary is available here.

Leadership of multi-church groups is complex and often difficult. It requires engagement with, and understanding of, diverse contexts; listening, theological reflection, vision and planning; skills in training and enabling of others.

It is important to emphasise that all these skills are rarely found in a single person and so to be most effective in mission, ministry, leadership needs to be collaborative. This is particularly so in rural multi-church contexts where the distances and distinct communities involved accentuate many of the challenges shared by local churches in all contexts.

You can read the full report via the University of Derby website.
